Peeling

When you peel your nails, you are removing the top layer of the nail plate, which is the part that is most susceptible to damage. This is why peeling can lead to nail thinning and brittleness. It is important to avoid peeling your nails and instead use a nail file to gently shape them.

Peeling your nails can also lead to the growth of fungi, which can cause a condition called onychomycosis. This is a common nail infection that can cause your nails to become discolored and thickened. It is important to keep your nails clean and dry to prevent this from happening.

If you do peel your nails, it is important to use a gentle, non-abrasive peeling agent. This will help to remove the damaged nail without causing further damage to the nail plate. It is also important to use a moisturizer to help to keep your nails hydrated and healthy.
